Re: GN Docket No. 14-28

To Whom It May Concern,

Bspeedy Wireless Inc is a small WISP (Wireless Internet Service Provider) in Southern Illinois and have been taxpaying members to our Federal, State, and local governments. We currently employ 7 individuals full-time and are looking to add a part-time position. Our coverage provides services in areas that are very rural and would have no other sources of internet if we were not here. To provide these services we use the unlicensed spectrum of 900 MHz, 2.4 GHz, and 5.8 GHz and co-exist with other services that use these frequencies such as public works and water companies that use the 900 MHz for telemetry. We do not and have not received any type of government funding, such as the universal service fund, to do this. Quite frankly we are small enough that an increase in disclosure obligations and enforcement risks would put a financial burden on the company that would require either no longer being in business or loss of employment for several employees.

Since we have been an internet provider we have never received any funding to prioritize any content provider's traffic. Our company believe in an Open Internet policy in which lawful content is not blocked. We have complied with the open Internet rules that were adopted in 2010 and many others over the years.

Small Broadband Providers like Bspeedy Wireless Inc have shown ourselves to not be "bad actors" in terms of Open Internet principles and network management. As stated earlier being a small provider we do not have the resources to comply with new disclosure and reporting requirements. In order to attempt this we would either have to lay employees off or try to increase the cost to our customers. Increasing the cost to the customer during these times were people are barely making enough to cover their current bills and some that have had to cut costs to continue to provide for their families, all this would do is cause families that are already hurting financially to loose service.

We do hope that you give our letter some consideration in making your decision.

Thank you,

Rickie D. Hickox
President
Bspeedy Wireless Inc.
